

A VALUABLE LESSON I LEARNT

As the saying goes “ A friend in need, is a friend indeed.” I have many friends but of all my friends I like Samad the best. There are good and bad qualities about him, which I would like to share with you.

Samad is a tall boy with fair complexion. He is very honest. He is good in football and other extra curricular activities. He sometimes gets restless. We sometimes even fight but soon become friends again.

He is very kind. Once, when all my friends were playing football ,I was badly hurt. When he got to know about me, he did not play with others but sat with me and made me feel better. Samad is always content with what he gets. He is extremely considerate. I remember an instance, when we were together, in his house one night. I could hear sounds of people laughing, and then I heard footsteps which sent a shiver down my spine. I was petrified but he comforted me saying that it was just my imagination. To divert my attention he switched on the television and told me jokes to keep me happy.

You may have many friends in life, but finding a true friend is difficult. This is a valuable lesson I have learnt. I don't think I can never find a friend like him.
